SITUATION SUMMARY

Air Quality

- Recent dry lightning strikes have caused many small fires in the Six Rivers and Shasta-Trinity National Forest as well as State Responsibility Areas.
- Current weather forecasts show the recent low pressure moving out of the area and replaced by a warming trend with drier weather and moderate to light winds over the area.
- The Saddle Fire, located in the Shasta-Trinity National Forest near the town of Hyampom, continues to produce smoke in nearby communities. At this time, smoke is laying in valleys but may lift and transport to further locations throughout the day. Satellite images show smoke traveled north toward Willow Creek and to the southeast past the Hyampom area.
- In Del Norte County, the Buckskin Fire located near Cave Junction, Oregon is producing smoke impacts in downwind areas southwesterly of the fire. Satellite imagery indicates that Smith River could be in the path of the smoke. Crescent City may also be experiencing smoke from the fire.
- Forecasting smoke impacts can be challenging as smoke can vary widely within just a few miles as Humboldt, Del Norte and Trinity Counties contain mountains, valleys, and a thousand different air flow patterns.
- Further Air Quality information will be provided to the public as updated information becomes available.
- For 24-hour Air Quality Information:

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

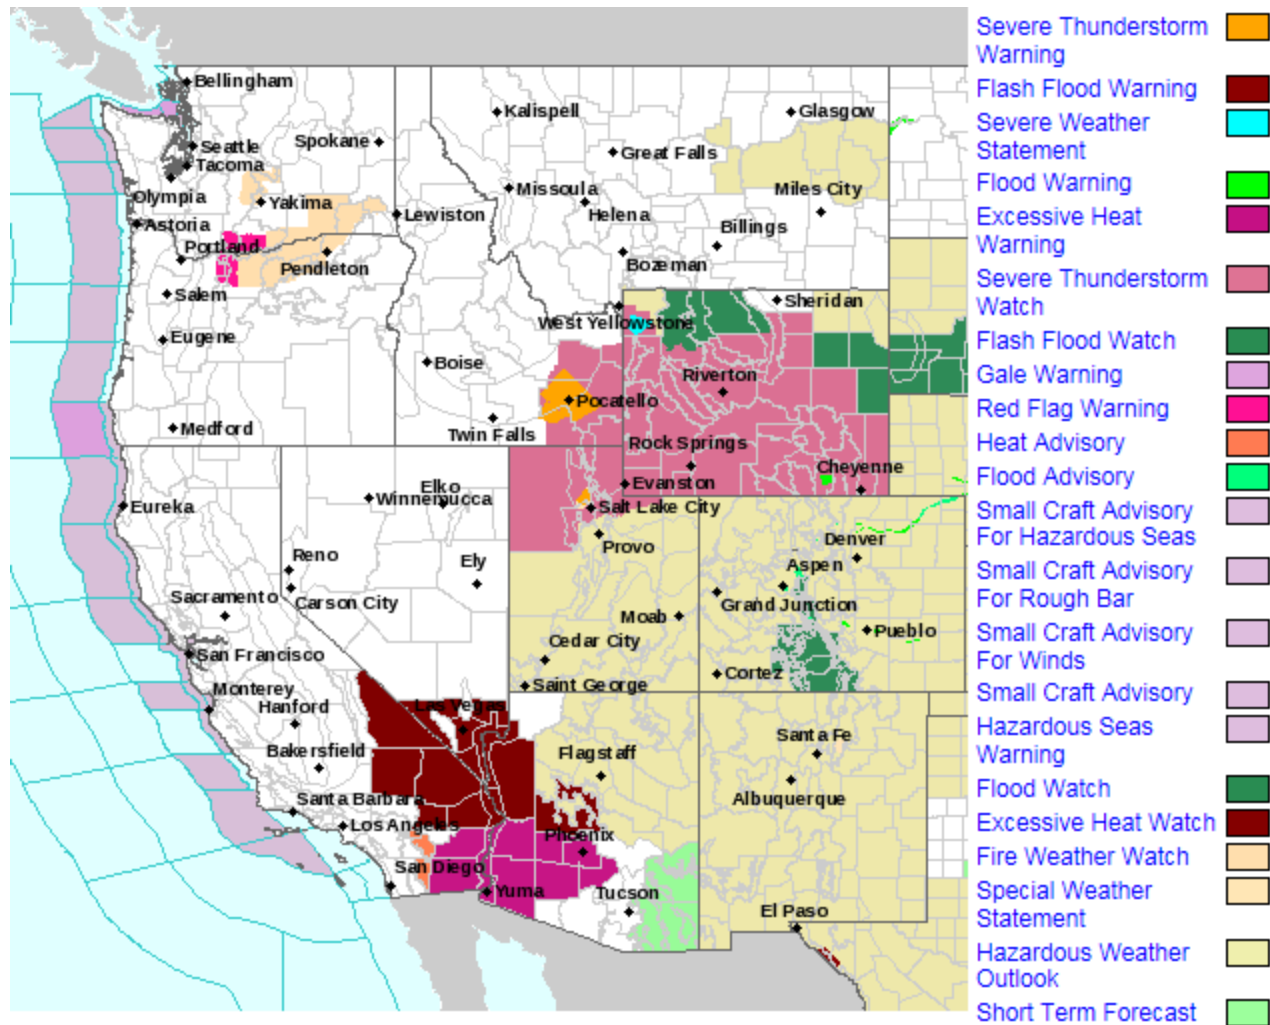

Westerly flow over Northern California will be in place without much variation into the weekend. We will remain between a low off the Canadian Coast and a high centered off Northern Baja. There will be a bit of moisture and instability in the far northern areas today. A very small chance for a few somewhat dry afternoon and evening thunderstorms in the northern mountain areas over South Central Siskiyou, Central Modoc, and Eastern Lassen Counties. Little change in the overall weather pattern is expected the rest of the work week. There will be areas of mid and upper slopes with quite poor overnight relative humidity recovery. Another very small chance of afternoon and evening mountain thunderstorms may return Wednesday and Thursday afternoons, but it will probably be too dry for more than just a few cumulus clouds. By Sunday, it looks like the Baja high will move inland and a trough will be along the Pacific Northwest Coast for a slight shift in the pattern, but this is quite uncertain at the moment. The marine layer has reestablished along the coast and is likely to remain in place until the weekend. Temperatures will remain above seasonal normals inland with warmest valley areas likely to be 100-105 degrees (10-15 degrees above normal there). Winds will mostly be westerly or northerly over the seven day period and relatively light and seasonably gusty in most areas. However, today and likely again Wednesday, moderately strong afternoon westerly winds with very low relative humidity, and gusts around 25-35 mph will blow east of the Cascade/Sierra Crest.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

High pressure building into California from the southwest will continue to bring warming and very low humidity away from the coastal areas through Tuesday. Maximum temperatures will be in the upper 70s and 80s in the mountains and 90s to 102 in the valleys today. After Tuesday, there will be little change in temperature across the region through Friday. Widespread triple digit heat will affect the valley and foothill areas this weekend as the high pressure strengthens further and moves directly over the region. Minimum humidity will be in the single digits and teens and nighttime humidity recovery will be poor above the marine layer through this weekend. The marine layer is around 2,000 feet deep this morning, but will shrink to around 1,000 feet starting Tuesday. A normal sea breeze will push inland each afternoon through this weekend. There will be no shower or thunderstorm activity across the region for the next seven days.
